THE foud between the Foreign Ministers at d'Haiphong, a translation of which we publish in another column. The letter does not appear to be the production of an irresponsible gossip-monger, but conveys the idea that it has been written by some one in close communication with the French Legation at Peking. It is inspired also by a strong feeling of irritation, running indeed to malevolence, for the reference to the unfounded scandal concerning the distinguished German Minister who has just left China can only be described by that term. Setting aside all the violence and excess of the language, however, we are confronted with the question whether the protocol quoted by the writer is genuine and whether the German and English Ministers have in reality played their colleagues' false. In the absence of any direct contradiction, there seems no reason to doubt the genuineness of the document. Assuming it to be genuine, then, it would seem that in February, 1892, the Representatives of Belgium, France, Germany, England, Italy, Japan, the Notherlands, Russia, Spain, and the United States met formally to consider the Audience question, and as a result of their deliberations arrived at an agreement which was duly | Vial's work lay amongst the Loles, by whom reduced to writing in the form of a protocol signed by each and all of them. Mr. O'Conor may have been acting under instructions from his Government, and have had no option in the matter, which, however, been only right to formally notify his colleagues of the withdrawal from the agreement. It is stated that after the audience had taken place the other Foreign Repredoyen, Herr von Beandt, whom, it would seem, they held responsible for having "al-

He was on his way to the legation at Peking, to which he has been appointed by the Foreign Office. About three years ago he was nearly going out to Sarawak in the service of Rajah Brooks, but he could not save as quickly as was wished, and in the result it has been much to his advantage. There were a few Singapore residents at the steamer, and they were much amused at the way in which the passengers succeeded in getting over the depressing time, coused by having been prevented from going on shore to see Singapore by the repeated caution that the vessel would leave at once! The piano was on the upper deck, and several of the passenger were comic-songsters of the first order, whom Singapore, smoking concert artists would by delighted to see among them, and a large number London comic songs of the latest type were sang with a chorus of some twelve voices, Mr. Tours playing the piano. On the voyage there had been, it was remarked, some really good singing, and this was only an off-night to pass the time. PROM NATIVE PAPERS Li Sai, the Kwangchow Prefect, has remently resigned from his post and is making preparations to start for his native home in Kwang si. He is succeeded by the Prefect of strived at Canton some ten days sgo. Mr. Channe is said to be an upright official, and on the 28th ultime when he took his seat in the Court he decided some cases in a way to which no exception could be taken. He is clever and smart in delivering judgment

At 9 p.m. on the 22nd ult., from the end of a brook near the Ta Tung Street a beast resembling a black dog but having two tails was seen to jump out and climb up the back wall of a house to the roof and was soon out of sight. While the man who saw this was wondering what it was, a cry of "save life" was heard and the shopmen in the street rushed out to see what the matter was. They found a poor old man, who had been sleeping at the entrance of the street, was being bitten by the snimal in question and they at once took out revolvers and daggers to protest the old man. But the animal was very quick and no sconer were the men out than it climbed up to the roof again and in an instant leaped back into the brook and disappeared, being seen no more. Search was made for it but without success.

On the morning of the 28th ult, a gang of armed brigands raided a family house in the T in Wa street and took away two girls aged fifteen and sixteen respectively. They placed their captives in a chair, in which a man was. ready to use gags to prevent their calling out. But while they were being carried along the streets the poles supporting the chair suddenly broke, resulting in all the three ocoupants being thrown out. Two of the robbers hurried up, each took one of the cap. tives on his back, and they ran at full speed until their destination was reached. It is remarked as sugular that they were allowed to apprehension of any of them. This provinside the hold of a wrecked boat at Honson and were taken to the Magi-trate. I fear that I cannot take to myself any credit for having aroused the Chartered Company to a sense of pushing their own interest, but the coincidence remains that within three months of the time my notes appeared in the Daily Press the prospecting was recommenced and has been followed in less time than the most sauguine of us could have expected with the discovery of what may turn out to be the source from which all the rivers flowing to the West Coast obtain their shows of gold to a greater or lesser extent. Haffkine, do not as a rule act as directly on the animal organism by their mere presence, as one might believe; but rather by the chemical substances they create, which are dangerous poisons for the organisms. Now, this production of poisonous substances does not constitute a function in separable from the existence of microbes. For, by modifying some of the conditions of existence of the little being, such as the degree of environing temperature and the presence of certain chemical substances, and above all, the seration and action of free oxygen, it is possible to transform a microbe into another resembling it in all points. except that it does not produce polechous sub-stances, or at any rate in only infinitesimal proportions. The new micrope shows no signs of legeneration from the original. It is quite as. lively and vigorous, notably in the faculty of breeding, and farthermore, the modification is lasting, the new microbes engendering beings similar to themselves. This series f remarkable facts was discovered by M Pasteur, and served as a basis for his method of artificial vaccination. He was led to the conclusion that if an "attenuated" microbe (one whose virulence has been diminished by the processes mentioned) be introduced into the body of Gerald knew little about the value of precions stones-his journalistic omniscience was not often tested in that waybut he could not help thinking that if they were real, as there seemed no reason to doubt that they were, he had never seen the equivalent of so much money so slightly treated before.

"They are very beautifu!" he said. "Beautiful! I should think they were," the big man auswered. "But they're not the mos beautiful I've seen or handled, not by a long chalk. What do you say to these I" and he drew from another packet another little canvas bag: Untying the string he shook another little pile of diamonds on to the tablecloth at a little distance from the first pile."

"Them's more boautiful," he said. So they were, undoubtedly; larger, finer, more brilliant. They looked exceedingly pretty as they gleamed and sparkled on the white table cloth, and the big man seemed to take an almost childish delight in their glitter, for he pushed them about with his big red forefinger, and smoothed them out with his big red palm. and appeared to be as pleased as a child with a new
